Manager's Log Tuesday, June the second 2020. Well looking around for something to talk about today and a lot of going on my goodness, things going down in LA you got those protests going on and people pointing fingers and a lot of confusion out there. And this COVID-19 got tensions build up among people that ordered to stay at home and well, people like to have their freedom move about the cabin as they will. But to keep people safe, needs to require people stay in place. So that's been the scenario for what going on three months now. Things get a little antsy out there.

And what is surfacing is that people are finding their voice. People are analyzing the situation. People are listening better, and they're still their anger is still the confusion. Things are boiling coming to a head and it's going to percolate somehow. And hopefully, what it's going to do is clear the air of some unreasonable behaviors. The old cliché, we're all in this together, and by golly, you know, we live on a closed system, the whole globe in this huge ball of air. What happens one spot is going to have an effect on someplace else.

And so we might be 13 hours away by car from LA. The ramifications of what's going on down there's gonna reach us at some point and somehow our consciousness is alert to that and we got to take a look at how does that play out here? To what extent we look at the the presidency, people are saying it's his responsibility to address the situation and he looks to his military says, "I'm gonna send in the troops", and people want to be treated as human beings to be appreciated for the contributions of what they do. And likewise, take on that responsibility as an individual and be given that opportunity to take on that responsibility as an individual.

So what's the new normal, the new normal. Once we get over this and get through this, there may be a vaccine someplace something happening in the medical field that's going to create a vaccine that will protect everybody from this, but the effects are going to be long lasting. Hopefully they're going to be long lasting towards the positive. More food for thought. Thanks for listening. Take care be healthy.
